Thankfully, I don't have a narcissistic mother nevertheless sadly I've known friends who do. I found this book enlightening as well as detailed in helping someone to understand not only the causes of this type of behavior but also how children's own characteristics are developed because of it. Written from his own experiences, Market sets out to help adult children of narcissistic mothers to better understand and even develop close, loving relationships with their mothers. The therapies and strategies may not work for everyone, however it will set you in the right direction in coping with your own egocentric mother. Remember the key is awareness and acceptance.

I am tired of reading books where I am given the opportunity to claim a 'free' gift, that someone has an "important" message for me and other spamming messages. This is very very unprofessionally and immature. STOP SELLING yourself, and instead write something good. Book content itself is barely satisfying. I would give it a good solid two star rating if it had just a glimpse of originality. The title of your book is DIFFICULT MOTHERS, so why do you only write about narcissistic behavior??!!! There are so many topics which an author of this book John Market could have covered and none of those were written. You should change your book title a.s.a.p. to something more suitable to your book content cos you are writing only about two things, narcissism and yourself, lol :D I can definitely see the pattern :D There is simply nothing in a book that I find worthy of reading which would entice me to recommend it down the road to people who are in the same situation. Everything which has at least a decent amount of worth was clearly copied from other books. Furthermore, I like reading about author section since it gives me an insight into a person who is writing, but this is simply too much. I don't need to know every aspect of your life through entire book. People are having real challenges in your life. Deal with yours and stop making it all about you. If you wanted to write about yourself then you should have written an autobiography. It seems to me that you are a bit too much into yourself, despite what you wrote on your author bio that you worked on destroying your ego and improving yourself, I simply don't see this from your writing and your personality. Overall, this was a poor marketing scheme to get money out of my pocket, but very effective one since you succeeded in doing just that. Your book description was enticing, but quality of your book is dreadful to none. This literally has to be the worst book I had ever read in my life and I wouldn't recommend it to anyone except to those who want to learn how to trick people into buying something which doesn't have any value at all. Finally, you said that you are entrepreneur, but it doesn't seem like that. Here is a tip for you. Time is money. Don't spend it into writing since you are lousy at it. Instead, get yourself a shrink if you need to talk about your mom and how successful you are. Do try to improve yourself, don't delude yourself and don't trick your readership. Time is priceless and you've spent my time in vain. Avoid at all cost if you too don't wanna get scammed.
